Issues in Political Psychology

Prof. Daphna Canetti

Course Number: 702.2193
Class Time: TBA
Class Location: TBA
E-Mail: dcanetti@poli.haifa.ac.il

Course Description:

What is political psychology? The name is new, with its inception as a separate discipline in the twentieth century, and the formation of an official society only in 1978. Yet sometime in the relationship between psychology and political processes as early as ancient scholars discussed purpose of this upper level course is to provide an overview of political Greece. The primary emphasis on the psychological mechanisms underlying political psychological research with selected topics that represent merely a portion of those covered behavior. By focusing on a list of you a taste of what political psychology is. When one hears in PP, this course is planned to give envision the study of elections and campaigns. While the political psychology, one might range of topics that fall within the purview of not inaccurate, this perception excludes a broad questions address political psychology topics: political psychology. For example, the following intergroup relations? How does threat impact? What is the impact of prejudice and identity on intergroup relations? How does threat impact? What is the psychological and physiological impact of war and individuals' political choices? Or what is the terrorism on individuals' political worldviews?

Greek fables discuss both the sour grapes phenomenon, in which desires are adjusted in with what we cannot have, and an alternative phenomenon in which we want what we cannot have. Machiavelli presents a complex and sophisticated manual for how the Prince should - cannot have power. De use psychology of relative deprivation key to the fall of the old regime in France. expectations and the concept the American system of government on critical assumptions. Finally, the founding fathers built and balances to counter human tendencies toward human nature, setting up checks similarly filled with assumptions about how relations domino. The practical political world is linked with human psychology; appeals to character among people might be said to be inevitably and every precinct committeeman understands the are a longstanding staple in democratic politics. underdog effect electoral importance of the bandwagon and the

This course has a lecture format: we meet once a week to learn, critically reflect, and digest materials. As you probably know, with these types of issues, consensual facts are often assigned be found. The course will therefore encourage a free and respectful discussion of nowhere to and worldviews, and will try to offer students some tools for informed and differing opinions related debates. While I will frequently lecture and at times guide effective participation in students come prepared to discuss our readings in an informed and conversation, I expect that all thoughtful manner. As the political Middle Eastern context is a "lively" conflict that breeds turning points and crucial events on a daily basis, I expect that all of you follow the news and use this knowledge to contribute to our group discussions.
Course Requirements:

1. Weekly writing responses

2. Oral Presentation

3. Mid-Term Exam

4. Term Paper

Final Grade:

1. Weekly writing responses 10%

   Students are expected to come to class prepared. This means they must read the material, as indicated on the accompanying syllabus, and participate in class discussions.

   For each text read, students will be required to hand in Transcription Notes. This means you are to choose and write out in their entirety three (3) sentences or paragraphs or verses which you consider especially significant to understanding the work being discussed that week in class.

   After each quote, free-write about what is important and/or significant about the passage. Do these select passages act as a key to unlocking the meaning of the text? Do they cause a personal reaction, emotionally, intellectually?

   These Transcription Notes will not be corrected (for grammar, spelling, etc.) nor will they be graded. But they must be handed in on the day we read the specific text and they constitute 10% of the final grade. Points will be deducted for Notes handed in late or not at all.

   Please e-mail the Transcription Notes to me in the body of the mail -- not as attachments -- before the start of every class.

2. Oral Presentation 20%

   The students (either on their own, or in couples) will choose one additional reading, marked with an asterisk (*), from the syllabus, and will present it in class (up to 20 minutes). Students will choose their readings by our second meeting (3.11). Students will email me a summary of their presentation up to three days (by Friday, 12:00 PM) before their class presentation.

3. Mid-Term Exam 30%

   The mid-term exam covers material from part I, “Basic Concepts and Theories in Political Psychology”. The mid-term exam will consist of four questions.

4. Term Paper 40%
The term paper is intended to provide you with the opportunity to more fully explore your class discussion topic, as well as examine it from a more empirical perspective. The term paper from the beginning of the course through week 12, and it will consist of twelve research questions.

Course Outline and Reading List

Part I- Basic Concepts and Theories in Political Psychology

Week 1: Introducing Political Psychology

Week 2: Intergroup Relations

Week 3: Threat Perceptions

Week 4: Political Participation in Democratic Politics
Week 5: Political Leadership & Decision-Making

Ariely, Dan. 2008. Predictably Irrational: The Hidden Forces That Shape Our Decisions. Chapters 1 & 9. Chapter 1 is summarized in this below TEDTalk

Week 6: Religion and Ideology

Week 7: Genetics and Neurobiological Revolution

Week 8: Midterm Exam

Part II – the Psychology of the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict

Week 9: Intractable Conflict: Basic Concepts and Case Studies
Week 10: Exposure to Political Violence and Terrorism

Week 11: Emotions and Political Behavior

Week 12: Peace Psychology

 Changes may occur, but they will be notified in advance